The Camping Trip

It was time to be going. What a success this camping trip had been! Dad was still bragging about the fishing and telling how he had landed “the big one.” There had been days of swimming and playing as well as days of doing nothing but resting on the grass and thinking about the stillness.

When the sun was setting and the sky was getting dim, Jim lifted his banjo and our singing filled the hills. We all wished we could stay another month as we folded our tents and fitted them into the bed of the truck.
