The Rock Band

The rock band had gotten a lot of publicity. The lanky rocker in the silken shirt and chains was a celebrity. His haircut was trendy, but Gail thought he looked a bit scruffy.

The opener by the trumpeter was a show stopper. Some of the words he sang were not identifiable, and some were unprintable. The pulsing throb of the drum was predictable. It would have been gratifying if they had stopped amplifying the music.

When Gail left the arena, she felt drained. She wished she had not paid so much for the tickets.
