The Traveling Man

Dan unlocked the door and threw his coat on a chair. He would unpack his bags another day.

What a hectic trip this had been! It seemed as if he had been running nonstop for days. Dan had been in such a cramped position on the jet that he couldn't sleep. He was glad to unfold his long legs and stretch when the jet finally landed.

Dan was thankful that these trips were infrequent. He was unwilling to be the only traveling man for the company.
