What Do You Want To Be?

Friends of my mother often ask, “What do you want to be when you grow up?” I don’t know how to answer.

They think I should set a goal for myself. I have been thinking about that.

I could be a dentist or a basketball player. I could be an artist or a house painter. I could be a policewoman or a retailer. Or, I could study subatomic stuff or subtropical bugs. It would even be fun to build a subdivision.

All of these jobs interest me. I have to remind her friends that I’m only ten.
