Trip to the Store

Jane hopped on her bicycle and hustled to the store. Mom needed some nutmeg so she could finish making the apple pie. She had also said, “While you are there, please pick up some pickles.”

It was simple to locate nutmeg on the spice shelf. But Jane was dazzled by the selection of pickles. There were rows and rows of pickles on display.

Some were sliced, some were whole, and some were cut in wedges. Some were sweet, while others were dill.

There were crinkle-cut beets. But the strangest jug of all held pickled pigs feet.

Jane was so confused that she went home without any of them.
