Elections

Many people don't vote when there's an election. Some of them have been punished for committing a crime and no longer have the right to vote. Others concede that they should vote, yet deplore their lack of time to go to the polls.

Many people say a political figure is not sincere. He will evade questions that require a direct reply, and declare himself to be for any subject that will win him a vote. Once elected, he often doesn't keep his agreement.

There are those who shrug and say they won't vote for any of them. But we cannot ignore the fact that we do elect a president. It's up to us to decide who that will be and to cast our ballot.
