Dinner In The Diner

Jeff said that nothing could be finer than to have dinner in the diner. He thought his wife, Sally, should stop whining.

Sally thought it was more desirable to dine in a place where there was danceable music and waiters in white jackets.

But Jeff liked shaking hands with Bud and the other fellows who always ate at the diner. He selected home-baked stuff from the menu on the chalk board.

Sally would have chosen items with French names. That's why Sally and Jeff don't go out for dinner very often.
